which they can exploit. As long as they can make mileage by scoring p.r. points in the media, they will not get down to serious bargaining.

For the part of Mr. Gorbachev, if he were to agree to set a definite summit schedule now, it would go a long way toward putting the Administration into a new mode. For a summit deadline would force the bureaucracies on both sides to reassess their positions on arms control and other matters, and the course of reconstructing the Soviet-American relationship would be put on a sounder footing. Therefore, Mr. Gorbachev can exert a very positive influence on current events simply by agreeing to a summit date. I have attempted to make this point at every opportunity, and I do hope that the message falls on receptive ears. I am pleased to see that the President has written to the Soviet leader to urge a meeting between Secretary Shultz and Minister Shevardnadze for the purpose of setting the agenda for a summit.

No one can reasonably doubt that the Soviets will remain anything other than our principal adversary for the foreseeable future. Nevertheless, the possibilities of developing and deepening the constructive aspects of our relationship should be fully explored. The Soviets need to reduce defense spending as much as we do. Their economy is not in the best shape. Their computer and information industries are outdated and falling steadily behind ours. Their communications and control systems—as revealed by the Chernobyl disaster—are antiquated and in need of major overhaul and renewal.

They need progress on an arms control agreement to obscure some of these failures. These are far more driving requirements than any particular human personality, and they give some hope for constructive action on the arms control front.

ABANDONED SHIPWRECK ACT

● Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation for myself and Mr. GRAMM which concerns the ownership of certain historic shipwrecks in State waters. The bill would assert U.S. title to certain abandoned historic shipwrecks in State waters and then transfer that title to the appropriate State. Currently, any abandoned shipwreck comes under the jurisdiction of international admiralty law, which applies the finders keepers rule of salvage to shipwrecks in State, Federal, or international waters. This has proven ineffective in managing some valuable wrecks.

Since the passage of the Submerged Lands Act of 1953, States have held title to the lands and natural resources within 3 miles of their coasts. Legal controversy over whether or not that included title to shipwrecks has caused confusion about whether State or Federal authorities have jurisdiction over historic shipwrecks in State waters. There was, therefore, a need to clarify the uncertainty over who should manage historic shipwrecks in State waters.

Three groups have demonstrated a keen interest in historic shipwrecks, which has added to the confusion over jurisdictional rights and resulted over the years in a number of lawsuits. The largest group is the sport diving community, which desires unrestricted access to shipwrecks for recreational purposes. The next largest group is composed of the professional salvors, who often spend much time, effort, and money to locate and recover wrecks that may be commercially valuable. Finally, there are the marine archaeologists, who want to see historical artifacts used for cultural education purposes. The groups have often been in conflict with each other, and this bill attempts to resolve their disputes and provide a reasonable management scheme for historic shipwrecks.

It is important to note that only shipwrecks in a State's waters that are included in or determined eligible for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places are covered by this legislation. The Advisory Council on Historic Preservation is directed to publish guidelines to assist States in developing legislation and regulations for management of shipwrecks in their waters.

Virtually every other nation has such legislation for historic shipwrecks in their waters. Twenty-six States in the United States already have legislation that provides for protection of historic artifacts and compensation for private sector recovery. Our legislation not only assures the State of the title and historical preservation of these shipwrecks, but guarantees that anyone who engages in the recovery of a shipwreck covered under the provisions of this act shall receive compensation for their activities.

Many of you may think that this only pertains to coastal States or States surrounded by large bodies of water. However, this pertains to us all. When a ship is wrecked and abandoned, all its contents aboard become a frozen record of that particular era. When that wreck is discovered, it is as if we have dug up a time capsule. And the contents in that capsule represent a bit of history that can help us better understand past eras and events. In these cases, much care must be taken when exploring and salvaging these remnants of the past. And those who recover these historical shipwrecks and their artifacts should be compensated for their work.

I want to emphasize the urgency in passing this bill. First, it clearly delegates authority to the States for historic shipwrecks in their waters. It also provides for the protection of natural resources and habitats in areas where historic shipwrecks are explored and salvaged. Finally, it encourages each State to allow for recreational diving and exploration of shipwreck sites and appropriate private or public sector recovery of artifacts in their waters.

Mr. President, this bill is virtually identical to H.R. 3558, which was reported out of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Oceanography Subcommittee on March 18 of this year. It is the culmination of years of revision and controversial testimony from numerous hearings. I believe that we finally have a bill all parties can agree to. ●

By Mr. THURMOND:

S.J. Res. 364. Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT PROVIDING FOR FORFEITURE OF OFFICE BY GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS AND JUDGES CONVICTED OF FELONIES

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, today I am introducing a proposed amendment to the Constitution which would require forfeiture of office for Federal judges and certain other officers of the United States upon conviction of a felony.

Mr. President, I believe that the citizens of our country will agree that those who have been convicted of felonies should not occupy positions of trust and responsibility in our Government. Under current Constitution law, however, it is possible for certain officers of the United States who are appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate to continue to receive a salary after such a conviction. In order to remove these officers from the Federal payroll, if they are unwilling to resign, it is necessary that they be impeached, a process which can occupy valuable time and resources of the Congress.

The Congress now has the power to impeach officers of the Government who have committed treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors. However, when the courts of the Nation have found an official guilty of a serious crime, it should not be necessary for Congress to retry the official prior to his or her removal from the Federal payroll.

The constitutional amendment which I am introducing will provide that any officer of the United States who is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, upon conviction of a felony and exhaustion of all direct appeals, shall be removed from office and shall lose all salary and benefits arising from service in such office.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to carefully consider this proposal and ask that it be printed in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

S.J. RES. 364

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution if ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years after its submission to the States for ratification:

"ARTICLE -

"Any officer of the United States appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, upon conviction of a felony and exhaustion of all direct appeals, shall forfeit office and all prerogatives, benefits, or compensation thereof."
